He then gravely takes his seat as moderator of the session, and orders Block to the bar of the church. He prosecutes like one of the Furt 8, and presides like a a Jeffreys. His four out of seven (the same that ordered the deliverance read as the law) find Block guilty and suspend him untif he repents. Humanity, to say nothing of religion, would new say let Block rest. But, poor Block! He dared to lead a "defense." This defense is made the occasion of the "book," that the ago listing 30 beemed to want as the himse and fast of all his terrures. But Job did not expect to be placed by this "book" in a fishe attitude and then attacked. This, however, is Block's ixp rience of the "book." I intend to prepare for and devote myself to a monastic life."

A few days later Camilla Devoti knelt before the altar by the side of the Baron Camucini, and the holy rites were performed by the young priest, Mastal Ferretti.

She happened to be among the last presented, and, on her name being mentioned, an emotion was visible in the express've face of the pope. The lady bent her knee for the benediction, and, looking quietly into his face, said, with a voice full of the sweetness and melody of other days, that she had a favor to ask, which was that her grandson be received into the grade d'elite; they had hesitated to take him, she said, because he looked delicate, but the youth was eager to devote his life to the holy father. When she had apoken, she manifested slight emotion, awaited a reply. The pope understood her feeling, and, laying his hand on her white head in benediction, answered that he knew too well the pain and mortification of such a refusal, as he himself had once experienced it; and he added, that the wish was fulfilled. Then he quickly walked toward one of the camereiri, who prepared to follow him, that he desired to be alone. He met the Baroness de Kinsky the next day, and revealed to ber the secret which, he said, ha i until then lain hidden in his heart, but which an old man could release from its prison, and relate as a last salute from an old frend. And he recounted the reasons why he had taken priestly yows, following, as he believed, a direct call from God. Stephens speaks the words of wisdom, as well as of earnest feeling, when he says that the manner of the horrible taking off of Lincoln was "the climax of our woe, and "the spring of unnumbered woes." The war was over, and Lincoln was at the zenith of his popularity and power. In every way he had shown that he would have used that power with clamency and with good judgment. It was his desire to restore the union. It was more than a desire it was his ambition. He had the power to do it, and had he lived, he would have done it. I am much pleased with your history and think it will supply a want long test. It has always come strange to me that a course of history in bohool, or College, should so marely include a history of the Jaws at dide Bible. From the examination of your book. I am of the option that it is just what I have long been wanting. I will place it in the hands of some of my pupils in February and expert the most satisfactory results. expect the most satisfactory results.

Figure J. T. Murrer, L.L. O., President of Honord College, Marion, Alabama.

I thank you sincerely for the copy of your "Story of the Bible." I have not introduced into my family, in many a year, any book that has pleased the children mo e, and I have seen none calculated to do them so mach go d. It is the Bible made as attractive to children as the cost charming etco-phony, filled with pictures and the most the liling saved narrations. Every family which has a Bible for the adults, should have this book for the children. Not only in every family does it deserve a pince, but every Saucay- chool and every other school should use it.

THE MUNICIPE ATLANTA.

Its Growth Among Our People Musical Organizations-Some

At one time our city had but little usical talent to boast of, in fact had but small taste for cuitivated, intelligent music. We are gratified at stating that there has been a very marked change in this respect. All are awar that music is of two kinds, the music of the al fections; then there is the music of the intel-lect; the one is the breath of nature, the other is the breath of art; we require no teaching in order to appreciate the former, we must be taught gradually and laboriously in order to comprehend the latter. The whole world has intuitive perception of beauty in the Scotch and in the songs of minstrel performers; be none without long training can enjoy a Ger-ma orstorio or an Italian opera.

In 1860 music was at a low ebb in our city. A few ballads, "The Cottage by the Sea," Her Bright Smite Haunts Mc Still," etc., was about a specimen of popular taste. There was atthat time but one professor of music, one music time but one professor of music, one music store, and no musical club or organization. The first club in the city was a joint one of music and the drama, and was organized during the war for he benefit of widows and orphans, and war for he benefit of widows and orphans, and for hespitias. The second club was organized at the close of the war, but want of genery, of harmony, and indifference, caused its life to be of few days duration. Then the Beethoven sprung into existence, and from it issued the first mozate. After a season, both died out. Then we had the Rossini, and this revived the Beethoven
